Back to Conventionals?

Reuters reported that after weeks of speculation, it's official: Russia, Saudi Arabia, and Iraq have declared their support for an extension to the oil production cuts OPEC and its partners agreed last December to regulate global supply and prices.

Several sources including RigZone and Oil & Gas Journal have reported that predictions for Brent are remaining strong for the remainder of 2019 averaging $70-73 per barrel, with Merrill Lynch predicting the Brent will be trading between $74 and $84 per barrel by year end.

2019 may be the year the shale trend finally fizzled. Several companies that were big shale players have sold off or pulled out of these plays. “The shale gas revolution has frankly been an unmitigated disaster for any buy-and-hold investor in the shale gas industry with very few limited exceptions,” Steve Schlotterbeck, former chief executive of EQT, a shale gas giant.

Time tested conventional plays remain a good investment with oil prices predicted to be strong through 2020. Radiant has numerous conventional programs in the Gulf Coast that are step outs from existing production and recompletes from ongoing production. John Jurasin, Radiant's CEO, reiterates “Conventional plays in the Gulf Coast pack a lot of bang for the buck. Entry into any of Radiant's programs is relatively inexpensive and return are higher than shale plays, not to mention less risky.”
